The hour approachd with swift but silent pace, Which brought the nineteenth birth-day. Twas a time Of genral merriment. Alonzo sole Appeard not to partake his childrens joy. They guesd not at the cause, but thought belike Some slight indisposition, and essayd To chase the frown of sadness from his brow. The father knew the time advancd apace, When separation, foe to kindred love, Must rust the link that bound them each to each, And this it was that causd his inward grief. Long had he musd upon-the mournful hour That should the band of union disentwine, In lacin melancholy. --This was nigh. --Alonzo of pecuniary store Had frugal plenty, still he could not give An ample competence to either child. One eve, emerging from her vestal couch, And chasing dusky twilight from the world, The moon beamd smiling. Silent and alone The father calld the obedient son apart, And thus addressd him. Faltringly he spake-- My son, were doomd to separate. Tis meet That I should sacrifice my present joy, And with the staff of my declining age Dispense, for thine advantage. Thou, my boy, Hast long time been the moiety of my hope In this disastrous granary of woes, This world of-wailing. Since thy childhood dawnd T has sprinkled constant comforts on my head, And givn substantial happiness: but now The world demands thee. Thou must learn to live, To cope with ill, and prize the meed of good....
