Walker & Company, 2010. Book Condition: New. Brand New, Unread Copy in Perfect Condition. A+ Customer Service! Summary: "To describe Lawrence Goldstone's The Astronomer as a great historical whodunit, is to do it a gross injustice. For though it is that, too, and in the most superb way, it is a lot, lot more. By artfully weaving theological conflicts and personal dilemmas with a well-crafted murder story, set in the early years of the Reformation, Goldstone manages both to illuminate the human side of a fascinating historical era and to add spiritual depth to the lives of the people caught up in its wheels. A writer who has shown, time and again, that it is possible to be highly entertaining and profound at the same time, gives us a perfect example of that rarest of species: a novel which can delight the lover of mysteries without disappointing one bit the reader of serious fiction." Apostolos Doxiadis, author of Logicomix "Lawrence Goldstone has produced a thinking person's suspense novel, a moral thriller whose plot is propelled along by ideas as much as by action. The novel's hairpin turns lead us through the history of astronomy, the politics of religion, questions of loyalty and faith, and the grubby labyrinth that was sixteenth-century Paris." Ross King, author of Brunelleschi's Dome "Clever, fast-moving, and richly depicted, The Astronomer is the kind of book that makes you forget about dinner until you smell the chicken burning in the oven." New York Journal of Books "Goldstone keeps his 16th-century themes murder, religious fanaticism, espionage and court intrigue moving at a 21st-century pace." Kirkus "Goldstone, author of last year's The Anatomy of Deception (2008), again turns his attention to the problem of traditional thinking versus the scientific approach to the physical world. Set in 1534 Paris, after the murder..."
